

Here I am ready to go, dressed in my tropical bird T-shirt. The sun is bright in my eyes and I'm anticipating a fun day.

This is a view of the rain forest from above. You are looking at the emergent layer. The canopy is very thick. You can see the sun shining. Only a little sunlight reaches the forest floor.

Imagine walking through the forest, listening to the parrots caw, and smelling the fresh foliage.

Rosy Periwinkle

This flower is one of my favorites. I think I love the name. Some periwinkles are used to help make medicine for childhood leukemia.

It rains almost every day in the El Yunque Rain Forest. It rains for about an hour every afternoon, and more during the rainy season. This rain overflows and runs down the terrain.

There are many waterfalls creating a spectacular view almost everywhere you look!
